It is not our intention to detain you, while we seek to illustrate the character and virtues, or tell you of the deeds of our immortal Washington. We might as well seek to illustrate the glory of the noon-day sun. Every school boy, among the first lessons of his progress in reading learns the history of the achievements of that illustrious man, and the high and glorious station, which he attained. And filled. But, perhaps, it has often perplexed the thoughts of the youthful aspirant, who has read of this wonderful man, to conjecture by what means, a young man, without a college education, and whose early life was spent among persons of limited requirements, and in times when knowledge was difficult of access; how such a man, under such circumstances, could not only rise to such eminence, but also be fitted to fulfil the various duties which devolved upon him, when he had attained it. And it may be, that the thought has often lingered in the minds of...
